

My name is Aggie Williams and I am originally from Monrovia, Liberia. My family and I migrated to the States in 2005, and now reside in Louisville, Kentucky. I graduated Central high school, in May of 2014, with hopes and dreams of pursuing a doctoral degree in pharmacy. I began working with the University Diversity office in the spring 2016, and I must say it has been a real pleasure working with the diversity team. Diversity has always been a big deal to me, because it's a way of enhancing social developments.

I'm currently serving as vice president of the African Student Association (ASA), a certified peer mentor, first Year student leader, and a member of several other organizations, like the national society of collegiate scholars and McNair Scholars Program. Throughout my college experience, I've learned that interacting with people from a variety of groups widens your social circle by expanding the pool of people with whom you can associate and develop relationships.
